Mental health matters, now more than ever

Written by Yona Lunsky

Mental health is health, and it matters. It mattered before the COVID-19 pandemic, and it matters even more now. This year during Mental Illness Awareness Week and beyond, we want to bring awareness to mental health and developmental disabilities. While many of us have access to a bounty of information at our fingertips, this is not always the case.

Globe and Mail: Isolation for people with disabilities

H-CARDD Director, Yona Lunsky and Mindfulness Leader, Sue Hutton contributed to a Globe and Mail article this month discussing the mental health impacts of isolation on people with developmental disabilities during the COVID-19 pandemic. The article calls for more mental health supports for people with disabilities and their families to help them navigate next steps in a trauma-informed way.
